

THE GREAT HALL AT THE EUSTON STATION.

MR. P. C. HARDWICK, ARCHITECT.

THE GREAT HALL AT THE EUSTON STATION.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

THE public are aware that very considerable works have been in progress at the Euston station of the London and North-Western Railway for some time past. These are now drawing to a close, and the new building will be opened to the public in a few days. It comprises two booking offices: the one to the east occupies the site of the old one, and will be used for the principal part of the traffic; the other is quite new, and is intended chiefly for the smaller trains. These open from a Hall of large size, which is the great public ante-room to all those apartments which are appropriated to the passenger traffic. Into it will be wheeled all the luggage from the quadrangle in front, and here or in the waiting-room (which opens from it), passengers may remain if they are too early for their train. On the piers between the arches will be large boards, on which will be placed notice of the destination and time of departure of the train next leaving the station, so that a passenger can at once see to which booking-office he is to direct his steps. In the centre of the hall will be a large refreshment counter, and it is intended that persons may be served in the waiting-rooms, which will be fitted up accordingly.
